About Brent Filson

After graduating from Wake Forest College, Brent Filson began to learn about leadership as a Marine infantry platoon leader and then as a company executive officer.

As a civilian, he has, during the past 19 years, helped literally thousands of leaders of all ranks and functions worldwide boost their leadership effectiveness. <http://www.actionleadership.com/leaders>

Working with some of the top companies in the world, he has developed motivational leadership strategies, processes and skill sets, and created and instituted leadership educational and training programs. <http://www.actionleadership.com>

He is the author of more than 20 books and scores of articles on leadership. His leadership books <http://www.actionleadership.com/products.html> and articles <http://www.actionleadership.com/articles/index.html> have been featured in more than 200 magazines and newspapers and scores of radio and television shows.

He has lectured at Columbia University, MIT, Boston College, Wake Forest University, Williams College, Villanova, and more; and he has spoken before many dozens of private, non-profit and government organizations. www.actionleadership.com/meeting_planners.html

His forthcoming book, The Leadership Talk: The Greatest Leadership Tool, will be published this June. Prepublication copies are available for the media.
